President's Message

What a blessing it is to receive the IAMA Notes twice a year! How else would we be informed about what is happening around the world in our schools and with our many SDA musicians? I doubt that many of us would know about the band festivals at Montemorelos University or the history of Hole Memorial Auditorium at La Sierra University without articles about them that appear in our Notes.

I always find it interesting learning about who has moved to different positions at schools and about what former students are accomplishing; and it is always wonderful learning about someone I have not known before in the Personal Notes.

We are so blessed to have the work of Dan Shultz as our editor of Notes and for his untiring energy in keeping up the Adventist Musicians Biographical Resource in both the printed 2014 edition and now the updated biographies at the Website (www.iamaonline.com). Helping him keep current with biographies and job openings is something all of us can help with by sending him information at shulda@charter.net This way we can all keep connected with one another.

And finally donations to IAMA are always welcome. The expenses are not huge, but they are a burden when the costs are carried by only a few. Remember that for most of us a donation is tax deductible and really helps since we no longer charge membership fees.

300 attend Montemorelos University Sixth Annual Band Festival

From March 23 to 27 300 student musicians from sixteen SDA schools in Mexico participated in a band festival held at Montemorelos University that included three “mega” bands, with members placed according to performance skills. The beginners and intermediate bands gave concerts on Friday evening and Sabbath afternoon, respectively. The advanced band performed during the church service, led by guest conductor Edwin Giovanni Santos, director of instrumental studies at La Sierra University.

The idea for the present festival began with a series of reunion concerts at UM that started in 2004. In 2007, the first band festival was organized in its present format and then repeated in 2008 and 2009.

After a hiatus due to political instability in Mexico, the fourth band festival was held in 2014 in Villahermosa, Tabasco, and in the following year it was held at the University of Navojoa in Sonora. This year's festival at UM was a four-day day event that started on Wednesday evening with a concert by the 15-member UM brass choir and eight guest artists.

Thursday and Friday included rehearsals and workshops conducted by guests from Mexico, Spain, and the U.S. Each of the mega bands filled the large platform in the UM church, which seats 2,500 and was filled to capacity for all of the programs.

The growth in music programs in the past three decades in Mexico and other countries in the region is due in large part to the students who have graduated from the music program at UM, one that continues to grow.

La Sierra Music Department Building Renovations

Hole Memorial Auditorium, home of the music program at La Sierra University, was named after Willet J. Hole, a wealthy financier who had once owned the land on which the school stood and had contributed $10,000 towards the construction of the auditorium. He died just before the building opened in 1937 and it was named as a memorial to him. It survives today as the oldest facility built for music in the circle of SDA colleges in the U.S.

The students raised the money for five pianos within one month after the building was occupied and two years later raised the funds needed to install a three-manual 19-rank Wurlitzer theater organ donated by Disney studios that had been used primarily to accompany Mickey Mouse cartoons. The facility with its three studios, ten practice rooms, classrooms, and 758-seat auditorium seemed like a dream for those in a program that had been scattered around the campus.

In the 1940s an addition was added that included two more studios, more classrooms and a rehearsal room and needed storage space. Although organist Harold Hannum did his best to subdue the theatrical aspects of the donated organ's sound, he was never able to rid the instrument of its "Disney mice." Donald Jon Vaughn, successor to Hannum, led out in his predecessor's dream to have a more suitable organ and in 1970, a three-manual 62-rank Casavant pipe organ was installed in the auditorium along with other changes in the building.

In that same year and subsequent years other renovations and additions in instruments continued until the facility, in spite of its age and historic value on campus, is still able to serve a thriving program. The most recent improvements this past summer (2015) included giving the auditorium a facelift when its floor was refinished and the room was painted. New chairs were also purchased, and room and stage lighting was updated.

Personal Notes

Carlot Dorvé, an accomplished trumpet player, is enjoying success in the world of music in spite of a daunting childhood and a formidable handicap. Both his playing and life story serve as an inspiring example to those who have heard him and know about his journey in life.

Carlot was born in Haiti into a poverty-stricken family. At the age of five he severely injured his right arm. When an infection developed and a primitive course of treatment went awry, it was necessary to amputate his arm. In spite of this handicap, he was determined to learn to play the trumpet and in spite of four years of being denied access to study on the instrument, was able at age twelve to have lessons, learning on his own how to hold the instrument with his thumb and little finger and play with his middle three fingers.

He practiced incessantly, becoming the best trumpet player at his school and a teacher of his fellow students. He then became the youngest member to play in Haiti's Philharmonic Orchestra at the Holy Trinity School of Music, the best and largest orchestra in Haiti, where he became principal chair and a teacher at the school.

He came to the U.S. as an exchange teacher in Michigan in 2010, and within a short while became a local and regional performance sensation. He was invited to audition at the college of music at Michigan State University and was accepted as a trumpet performance major with a full tuition scholarship. Other performances led to study with nationally-known trumpet teachers and a meeting with Wynton Marsalis, who was so impressed that he has paid for Carlot's room and board at MSU during the past four years. Following graduation this spring, Carlot will enroll at Andrews University to pursue an M.Div. as he prepares to be a pastor while still continuing to play his trumpet.

For a more detailed biography about Carlot's nightmarish childhood, miraculous experiences in Haiti and the U.S., and moving and inspiring unshakeable spiritual commitment, go to www.iamaonline.com

Aleta King is Director of the Avondale College Conservatorium of Music, a position she has held since 2012. She is artistic director of Avondale's premier vocal ensemble, The Promise; director of the Avondale singers and chamber orchestra; and lecturer in musicianship and conducting.

Prior to King's appointment at Avondale she lectured at The University of Queensland, The University of Melbourne, and Queensland Conservatorium, and guest presented for the Australian Society for Music Education. She has also been a guest presenter and lecturer for the Australian Society for Music education (ASME), Kodály Music Education Institute of Australia (KMEIA), and the Australian National Choral Association (ANCA).

The elder of two daughters of Brian and Barbara Carruthers King, Aleta was born in and spent most of her childhood in Brisbane, Australia. Her mother, a singer, had come from a musical family with German ancestry who have been involved in music as professionals and amateurs for generations.

Because Aleta attended a primary and secondary SDA school where there were no music programs, she studied music privately. Her first violin teacher, Jan Cawse, nurtured her growth in playing and passion for the instrument through use of the Suzuki method. Later teachers included Carol Slater (UK) for violin and Max Olding (AUS) and Orsolya Szabo (Hungary) for piano.

King earned her Associate of Music, Australia, in 1993 on piano, and then attended the Queensland Conservatorium, where she completed a Bachelor of Arts in music with honors in 1995, with piano and violin as her first and second performing areas, respectively, and won the Ellaways B.A. Music prize for piano performance. The following year she completed a Post Graduate Diploma of Education (Secondary) and Instrumental Music (Strings) at the University of Queensland.

She then traveled extensively, completing Grade 8 violin under Carol Slater through Trinity College, London, and finishing a Diploma of Music Pedagogy in 2003 and an Advanced Diploma of Choral Conducting in 2004 in Hungary at the Liszt Academy's Kodály Institute.

Following her return to Australia, she completed a Master of Music Studies in Choral Conducting and Musicianship Pedagogy at the University of Queensland in 2007. From 2005 to 2011, she taught in the music program at U.Q., where she received Best Teacher nominations in her final year. She is currently enrolled in a D.M.A. degree program in Conducting under the tutelage of Dr. Neil McEwan at the Sydney Conservatorium, University of Sydney.

Kurt Tadao Miyashiro is director of instrumental music and associate professor in music composition and history at Union College, a position he has held since 2013. Prior to this appointment he was a teacher at Southeastern Illinois College.

Kurt was born in Los Angeles and grew up in Lodi, where he went to Lodi Adventist Academy, California, graduating from there in 1983, as president of the senior class.

After earning a bachelor's degree in music at Pacific Union College, with piano as his performance area, he taught at Mile High Academy in Denver, Colorado, where he met Elizabeth (Beth) Welch, a graduate from Union College and a grade school teacher. Following their marriage in 1992, they taught at Paradise Academy and then at Fresno Adventist Academy, both in California. While living there they completed master's degrees at California State University in Chico.

They moved to Minnesota, where Kurt completed a Ph.D. in music composition at the University of Minnesota in 2005. His dissertation was writing the music and lyrics for The Walleye Kid. Following graduation he wrote the music and assisted with the lyrics for a production of the musical Filipino Hearts which was premiered in the fall of 2006 by MU Performing Arts in Minneapolis. Rick Shiomi, co-author, observed that "working with Kurt Miyashiro is like stirring a pot and the music just seems to waft up from the broth. As I hear his melodies, the lyrics start flowing, until the music and lyrics form a distinct song."

In the fall of 2005, following graduation from MU, Miyashiro began teaching at Southeastern Illinois College, where he would teach for the next eight years. In 2013 he accepted his present position at Union College.

In 2014 he was invited to guest conduct a choir composed of 162 students from six academies in Central California for a benefit concert to underwrite expenses for two World War II veterans to travel to see the WW II memorial in Washington D.C. His father, Frank, who served as a medic in the Army, was present for the concert.

The Miyashiros have three children - Tori, a senior at College View Academy, and twins, Andrew and Madaleine. Beth teaches in the public school system.

Dan Shultz will be serving as assistant editor in charge of entries related to music and musicians in the new SDA Encyclopedia due to be released in 2020. This is the first SDA Encyclopedia since 1996, when a revision of what had been written earlier was published. It is planned to be released as a four-volume set and will be a fully annotated work with minimal reference to the 1996 version, which did not list sources and authors. It is likely to be the last printed work of its type, which, once placed online, will be updated as needed.
